“The best class I ever had”

by Ian Mailloux

That's how Patrick Bamford describes Chapleau High School's class of 1970, who recently met for their 40th reunion.

“They were such a good group, fun people with great personalities,” Bamford added.

said Allan Pellow, a member of that graduating class and currently the Township of Chapleau's chief administrative officer.

Coming from all over the surrounding area and as far away as Ottawa, members of the class shared stories, laughs and reunited with former

“We always seem to want to come back to Chapleau.”

Joanne Hufnagel

“Everyone was special to everyone else.”

It was in Bamford's Grade 11 physical geography class in 1969 when the 42 students decided to meet at the 10-year anniversary of their graduation the next year. Four decades and four reunions later, the atmosphere is as festive and warm as ever.

“I don't think there's any other class that's ever done that and kept with it over 40 years,” classmates, some for the first time in a long time.

It was 30 years since Joanne Hufnagel had last seen her best friend from high school, but as soon as they met again, “we just picked up where we left off.”

“It made my weekend,” Hufnagel said.

The reunion location has always been back where it all started, despite some suggestions of other locations.

“We always seem to want to come back to Chapleau,” Hufnagel said.

Bamford describes his 10 years in Chapleau as “the best of my life. It's all about the community, everyone is welcoming all the time.”

The reunions are important, Hufnagel said, because it's important to touch base with who you were.

“You become your old self a little again. These people knew you when, when you were shy, when you were on the hockey team, when you weren't as successful as you are now. You have to just be yourself.”

The next time the group plans to meet again is in 2020 for the 50th reunion, though there has been talk of meeting sooner.

“Joanne Hufnagel and Jane Simpson hold a painting raffled off at the 40th reunion of the Chapleau High School class of 1970. The proceeds from the raffle went to Chapleau Long Term Care and the Chapleau General Hospital Foundation, with each respective charity receiving $100.”

Vince Crichton active in Chapleau life but devoted to preservation of this beautiful rugged land and the animals that roamed it.

Chapleau Moments

by Michael J. Morris

After graduating from Grade 13 at Chapleau High School, it appeared that Vince Crichton may have followed a

Chapleau area, the line from Robert Service's famous poem 'The Spell of the Yukon' perhaps sums up his love of the forests and career as a banker or a plumber or a theatre operator, but such was not to be as he seems to have already chosen his lifestyle and country where he would live -- "The woods where the weird shadows slant."

Although Vince would spend most of his life in the wildlife. In an article paying tribute to Vince in 1977 in the Chapleau Sentinel, it is noted that Vince "devoted his life to the preservation of this beautiful rugged land and the animals that roamed it."

"Through his work, he was able to oversee what he loved the most -- the austere, vigorous northern country, the sphere of his reality."

Vince was born in Sunderland, England, and as a boy of seven, arrived in Chapleau in 1913 with his mother Helen, brother George, and sisters Vera and Anne, where his father Walter Vincent Harvey had established a plumbing business in 1911. Rita, Edith, Joe and Charlie, also his brothers and sisters were born in Chapleau. His father also took over the motion picture theatre.

By 1917, land had been purchased in Mulligan's Bay and as his son Dr. Vince Crichton writes in Chapleau Trails, a camp was built, which is still in the Crichton family. Dr. Vince noted that the camp was built by his grandfather, his father and brother George, George Hunt (my grandfather) and Ernie Quelch.

After completing high school Vince worked with his father in the plumbing and theatre businesses and was also employed by the Royal Bank, but by 1933 he was appointed game warden with the department of games and fisheries, later the department of lands and forests, then ministry of natural resources.

Dr. Vince relates an interesting anecdote told to him by his Uncle George. While Vince was helping his mother raise the family after the death of his father in 1932, he "poached, trapped and hunted food for the family as there was no money. Eventually he had to stop when the government made him the game warden."

In 1935, Vince married Dora Morris, (no relation) the daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Fred Morris who also lived in Chapleau. Vince and Dora bought a house on Queen Street, next to Dora's parents.

Many of us will recall reading 'Young Bush Pilot' by Jack Hambleton where Vince is mentioned. Hambleton writes about Vince catching poachers including the legendary Grey Owl to fixing fire pumps based on his experience as plumber to chief ranger Ernie Morin wondering where he was and then seeing him emerging from the fog in front of the point -- "at the outboard motor at the stern of the larger canoe was the unmistakable form of the big overseer." If you can get a copy of Young Bush Pilot, it is a great read.

In 1948 Vince was appointed inspector of the Chapleau District which included the Chapleau Game Preserve. In 1955 he was chosen by the Ontario government to work for a year at Winisk on the Hudson Bay coast on polar bear, blue geese, caribou and seals.

Despite his work and travels, Vince was also actively involved in the life of Chapleau. He enjoyed curling until 1976. He would also take out his mouth organ to liven up many a gathering with lively music.

and baseball, and was catcher on teams for many years. Later he umpired ball games, sharing duties with J.M. 'Jack' Shoup. He also liked playing his horn and was a member of the Chapleau Town Band, playing the E Flat Bass Horn

Vince also served as chair of the museum board, and on the library and hospital boards and was a resource person to the Cubs and Scouts. With his friend Alcide Small he donated a trophy to Chapleau schools for a competition on conservation issues. Vince was also a member of the Masonic Lodge.

A history buff, Vince wrote 'Pioneering in Northern Ontario' a valuable contribution to the life and times in his beloved north country.

Among the honours conferred on him was being named as a member of the Hudson's Bay Society. There were only 500 members worldwide. He was accepted into the society for his work in locating Brunswick House an old Hudson's Bay Post.

When Vince retired in 1969 as fish and wildlife supervisor, a mark of the esteem in which he was held was the presentation to him of a boat and motor by the people of Chapleau.

Dr. Vince Crichton will have his annual lecture this year on ungulates specifically "The World of the Moose and The Man Who Would Be Moose" at the Royal Canadian Legion Hall in Chapleau on July 31 at seven p.m.

Mixing golf and business

For many, combining business and golf is the very best in multi-tasking. What better way to build a relationship with a client, a prospect, or even a co-worker than with four hours of recreation in a private, outdoor setting?

But there's a downside to doing business on the greens. The Income Tax Act contains very strict rules about business deductions when golf and entertaining clients are involved and the Canada Revenue Agency is duty-bound to apply them in all appropriate tax situations.

Here, Chartered Accountant Frédéric Pansieri of Soberman LLP and Chartered Accountant Sam Lieberman, MBA, both of Toronto, provide smart tips for people who want to play golf with business associates and play by the tax-deduction rules, as well.

Forgo the green fees and the cart rentals

These are non-deductible, regardless of who's playing and their relationship to you.

Eat, drink and remember the 50 per cent rule

Unlike green fees and other costs related directly to the game, you can deduct a portion of the food and beverages you purchase at a golf facility when you entertain clients there. In most cases, the maximum is 50 per cent.

Employees are business associates, too

The golf-specific expenses won't make the cut. But 100 per cent of the cost of meals will be deductible if all the employees of an employer's particular place of business are eligible to attend the function, and such events don't take place more than six times a year. Otherwise, it's 50 per cent.

Make an exception for charity

A company tournament for a charitable cause offers some special tax considerations. The primary purpose of the event must be fundraising to benefit a registered charity, which provides you or your company with a receipt that excludes the value of the green fees and cart rentals. Depending on how the tournament is structured, up to 100 per cent of the cost of meals may be deductible.

Don't neglect your record keeping

The CRA expects you to be able to substantiate any expenses or deductions. Whether it's two clients for a round of golf and a beer in the clubhouse, or the entire company for a tournament, you must keep track of who attended, when, and what their relationship is to you or the organization.

Taxable benefits sometimes count

Companies have been known to buy or pay for things – for example, club memberships or vehicles – that can constitute a taxable benefit to the employees who use them or receive the benefit of them. The rules, circumstances and conditions that determine deductibility are complicated. Consult your Chartered Accountant about your particular case.

Conferences can stretch the limits

If golf is combined with another legitimate work activity, such as a conference or training session, all the non-golf expenses related to that activity may be deductible. That includes room rental, meals and any travel costs. Of course, the 50 per cent rule still applies to entertainment and associated meals – even if they're not related to golf – and the CRA must be satisfied that the expenses you claim are reasonable under the circumstances.

Take advantage of the chance to advertise

Golf tournaments in which your clients are playing can offer great marketing opportunities for the company. Give-away golf balls with the company logo, T-shirts, golf caps; even banners and signs can all be considered promotional items. As such, the costs are legitimate business expenses, and 100-per cent deductible.
