Chapleau remembers those who served their country

By Jim Prince

Many residents of Chapleau turned out on a brisk, but sunny morning last Wednesday to honour the Canadian soldiers who risked their lives for freedom.

On the 11th hour of the 11th day of the 11th month, they paused to remember those who gave the ultimate sacrifice in defense of freedom.

The cenotaph at Branch 5 of the Royal Canadian Legion Hall was the focal point for the local ceremonies, attended by some of the surviving soldiers who left Chapleau to go to world war two, the Korean conflict and peacekeeping missions.

In a community where support for the Royal Canadian Legion remains high, the soldiers were joined by municipal officials and others representing business and commerce, government and policing, many community organizations, school children and the clergy to place wreaths in remembrance.

The ceremonies and a social following, were organized by the Royal Canadian Legion, Branch five.

Local hospital workers join province wide demonstration against McGuinty

By Jim Prince

Bolstered by other union members in the community, Services de Santé de Chapleau Health Services workers too to the streets last Tuesday as part of a province wide protest against the McGuinty Government.

Following the lead of those in the rest of the province, the workers here, members of local 4108 of the Canadian union of Public employees say they took the action after waiting patiently for weeks for the Ontario Liberal government to offer them an apology for demeaning their work and for suggesting they are overpaid and under worked.

Carrying placard, some stating

"Ontario has had enough of Liberal lies", the workers marched through the noon hour along Birch street.

They were joined by other local unionized workers, including OPSEU, The Teamsters local 319, representing workers at CP Rail, the Canadian Auto Workers, the Ontario Secondary School Teachers Federation and the Ontario Nurses' Association.

"If the Liberals and Premier McGuinty refuse to recognize the important contribution tens of thousands of hospital workers make to direct patient care, then they are going to hear from us," said Kim Genereux, spokesperson for CUPE local 4108 at Serves de Santé de Chapleau Health Services, in a news release. The union local here has about 42 workers in its bargaining unit.

On October 20, Ontario Health Minister George Smitherman said Ontario hospitals can cut costs by slashing the wages of hospital workers and contracting out the jobs to for-profit private companies.

"The Liberals need to acknowledge that we are a valued part of the clinical tams at our hospitals. We are calling on the Premier to tell us he will not break our hospital agreements and contract our our jobs," said Genereux.

Chapleau a part of Juno Beach memorial

By Jim Prince

The community of Chapleau now has a physical presence at Canadian soldiers landed during World War Two.

Council approved spending $2,500 towards the cost of the Juno Beach Centre, and has been notified a plaque bearing the Township Logo, acknowledging the contribution has been placed at the Centre, which is both a museum and memorial.

There have been memorials of Canada's World War 1 contributions such as the beaches of the one at Vimy, but until now there has not It's been widely been a memorial to Canada's significant World War 11 accomplishments.

Many young men left Chapleau and fought in the conflagration. With the passing of time, only a few survive, and the Juno Beach Centre will serve to honour all.

Some of the Chapleau veterans, have returned to visit the area.

The few remaining veterans remember that time on June 6th, 1944 Allied troops stormed Normandy recognized that Canadian forces, which included the Chapleau volunteers, were among the finest in action.

Chapleau has a long history of honouring its citizens who fought in the wars and the Royal Canadian Legion Branch number 8 here, was one of the first established in Canada.

November 20 is Canada's National Child Day.

FEDNOR INVESTS IN CHAPLEAU CREE FIRST NATION PROJECT

Brent St. Denis, Member of Parliament for Algoma-Manitoulin-Kapuskasing, announced FedNor support to the Chapleau Cree First Nation for research into the viability of establishing a cedar manufacturing facility on the Fox Lake Reserve.

The purpose of this project is to undertake a comprehensive feasibility study for the operation of a value-added manufacturing plant in Northern Ontario. No major cedar manufacturing facility currently exists in Ontario. As a result, the majority of cedar is being shipped to Quebec or the United States for processing.

The Chapleau Regional Development Corporation, through its community economic adjustment process, had previously recognized the potential for such a facility in the Chapleau area, and the community fully endorses this initiative. The facility would fully utilize harvested cedar for four primary products. Butts of the tree would be manufactured into cedar shingles for roofs or walls, the centre of the log would be used for saw-log processing, and the tops would be transformed into outdoor/indoor furniture and guard rail posts. All "waste" would be processed for mulch on playgrounds and gardens.

"The Government of Canada works with partners at the local level to create growth, employment, and selfreliant rural and Aboriginal communities," said Mr. St Denis. "This initiative not only benefits the residents of the Fox Lake Reserve, but also the community of Chapleau and the entire region."

Fed Nor is providing $63,540 to help cover the costs of the study.

"This project will result in increased employment opportunities for the members of the Fox Lake Reserve, as well as surrounding areas," said Wade Cachagee, Chief of Chapleau Cree First Nation. "We look forward to the economic benefits this facility will provide and are proud to be involved in making it a reality."

Council hopes that all vehicle owners will respect township overnight parking regulations to avoid these fines. Warning tickets will not be issued.

Pay the price for blocking snow removal

By Jim Prince

It's a problem every winter when snow removal crews try to do their job.

Now, following a move by the Township council, those who leave their vehicles to impede snow removal operations will pay a hefty fine.

It's now going to cost $50.00 for the offense, up from the previous $15.00. A compromise by Deputy mayor Bud Swanson to have the fine set at less than $25,00 failed as the council supported the larger amount in a unanimous vote.

"It's meant to be a deterrent," said mayor Earle Freeborn in an interview. "For those people who park overnight and interfere with snow removal."

The township is preparing a bylaw and will give public notice about the change.

Truck parking allowed on Monk street

By Jim Prince

Township council has decided heavy trucks will be allowed to park on Monk street after all.

The issue came to council when the proprietor of the Cavalier Motel on Monk Street requested council allow trucks to park on that street for driver shift changes.

Business owner

Amy Toor wrote council that truck drivers staying at the motel are receiving parking tickets during shift change.

"I would like to mention that I have already lost the restaurant business," she wrote, adding, "now for the motel I need support from the township to keep my business."

After studying the issue, council last week voted to allow parking there for outbound vehicles only.

There was one stipulation attached to council's approval. Trucks must not park in the space, during business hours at the Doctor's office.

The bylaw officer was instructed to monitor the situation.

NO, NO, NOT THE BUSH!

Chapter Five

Having escaped from their captors, Julie and Marc are alone in the bush, and still arguing!

There was a moment of silence as Julie's mouth hung open. She considered a sarcastic reply but finally said, quietly, "Stop saying that, Marc."

"Saying what?"

"'If we get out alive. I hope to live to see it.' "We're going to be all right. Don't be so negative."

"Are we going to be all right? Do you know what to do here?" asked her cousin. Julie stood up, brushing dirt off her seat.

"First thing. Water. Second thing. Shelter. Is your watch working?"

"Yes," answered Marc, looking at it, "It's seven-thirty."

"Okay. We have only a couple of hours of good light. Too bad it's so cloudy. We can't tell direction and it cuts the day short. Let's find water.' She gazed around, judging the shape of the land." There's a line of black spruce over there.

They like wet places. Let's start there." It was punishment, forcing their tired and bruised limbs to push through the forest. They reached the stand of spruce and were glad to find it relatively easy walking in the dim aisles between the trees. Ahead was a rock face sticking up like a wall as high as their shoulders. Tracing their way along it they found a place where the trees opened up to reveal clumps of cattails. Eagerly they shoved their way through the cattails and were rewarded by the glint of light on a tiny pool. They squatted on the flattened cattails and scooped out handfuls of water. It was the colour of weak tea, filled with particles of dirt, but very satisfying!

Afterward Julie led the way back to the rock face, sizing up each fallen tree she saw. One had been blown down, its flat disc of roots supporting the base, its upper end resting on the rock. Under her direction Marc dragged over several small dead spruces. They lined these up, resting one end on the ground, the other on the log. An hour's labour produced a small shelter with one wall of stone, and a sloping roof. Sheets of bark peeled off big logs on the mossy ground served to cover the framework of the roof. Marc used the jackknife to cut spruce branches for a floor.

Armloads of moss cushioned the branches, taking away some of their prickliness, and making a soft place to sit. The twilight was fading now. Julie served out the last of the food snatched from the kidnappers' cabin; a pack of beef jerky. They were too hungry to save any for the next day. After one more drink, the youngsters settled in for the night.

"Say, Julie," asked Marc as they lay huddled together for warmth, "were you just putting on an act for Baldy and Blue-Eyes when you talked about 'wolves and bears and everything'?"

"Of course! I just wanted them to be too scared to come after us! The only wildlife that will try to eat us is the bugs," she laughed. "I hope..." she added silently. The bugs really did seem to have hostile intentions. There was an ominous hum in the air as hundreds, perhaps thousands, of mosquitoes surrounded them. Even with fly

spray, Marc and Julie were being bitten. To take their minds off the discomfort, they began trying to guess how quickly their disappearance had been noticed, and what kind of search might be underway.

"I'm worried about my Mom," said Julie finally. "She'll feel so helpless at home in Chapleau, getting news long-distance from Sudbury. I just hope my Dad called her first and she didn't have the police just suddenly show up at the door." There was a brief silence.

"I miss my mother," said Marc softly. Julie mentally kicked herself. Marc's mother had been dead just less than a year. Julie couldn't think of anything to say. She put her arm over Marc's shoulder. Neither spoke. Overcome with fatigue, they soon slept.

A breeze sprang up, sweeping away the mosquitoes. The temperature dropped. Presently a glow appeared behind the moving clouds. Patches of grey, black and silver swirled apart to show the face of the moon, almost full. Eventually the wind died away. Deep silence fell.

Marc awoke, cold and cramped. Moving carefully to avoid waking Julie, he sat up and stared out of the shelter at the surrounding forest. It was a different world. Silver-white light lay in pools on the forest floor, and spotlighted the spruces here and there. Tree trunks stood, deep black, like columns of a great building. A sky of rich dark blue, powdered with stars, arched over the treetops. The leafy plants at the foot of the trees had each stem and leaf edged with bright silver light. It reminded Marc of a stage, set for a grand entrance. The moon waited overhead. The silence was heavy.

Somehow the cold stillness demanded a response. Marc's lips moved. "Please," he whispered, "please help us."

Nothing happened, except a small animal -a rabbit? A hare? hopped slowly into one of the pools of light. It stayed there, nibbling leaves peacefully. Watching it, Marc relaxed and grew sleepy. He lay down and closed his eyes.

When he opened them again, it was daylight. He was alone. "Julie?" he called. He heard her muffled answer. He got up, and, following her voice, discovered her digging around among the cattails.

"Bring the knife!" she said. He produced it, and she began cutting roots from the plants. "This is breakfast," she told him, rinsing the thick fleshy roots in their little pool. She handed him one and he chewed it cautiously.

"Not bad!" he exclaimed, surprised. "Will it support human life?"

"Sure! And yours, too!" quipped Julie with a grin. Marc pushed her and they both toppled over, laughing. Immediately they heard a rustling and snapping of twigs. Something had been startled by their loud laughter! They stood up and looked around. A small bleating noise attracted their attention to a tree not far away. Two bear cubs were climbing it, peering around the trunk at them. Marc gasped. Julie swiftly bent and picked up the cattail roots. She stuffed them into her pocket.

"Time to leave," she said briskly. "Mama will be arriving any minute to see what's frightening her babies, and we don't want to be here, do we?"

As a parent, what can I do?

Why would a child try drugs? There are many reasons. Maybe their friends use drugs and they want to be part of a group, perhaps they wonder what using drugs is like. It may be that using drugs looks like it may provide fun, relieve boredom or possibly they don't know how to say no. They may have seen adults or older family member use drugs. As a parent, what can you do?

B e c o m e

knowledgeable about what a drug is. Everyone has an idea that marijuana or cocaine is a drug, but do we acknowledge that alcohol and tobacco are drugs, or that cough syrup is a drug. Once you have gained knowledge about what a drug is and how it can affect a person, you will become aware of the warning signs that someone close to you may be using drugs.

Understand that it's a common fact; children are curious and will take risks to explore their world. As a parent you can help your children make wise decisions in discovering their surroundings. This can be done by providing your children with a good role model; actions speak louder than words. That doesn't mean you shouldn't speak with your children about the dangers of drug use. Start small, talking about the little things like how the day went, your child's favorite activity or what they don't like, is a way to build up a dialogue to talk about the more serious subject of drug

If you believe that your child may have tried tobacco, alcohol or any other drug, don't ignore it. Here are some tips on addressing the subject.

- 1. Approach the topic calmly.
- Do not accuse.
- Say what you have heard or observed to lead you to the conclusion that your child may have tried drugs.
- 2. Try to find out what is bothering your child.

- Why is your child using drugs?
- If there is a problem, together you can search for solutions.
- 3. Talk about how dangerous drugs are.
- Talk about things your child may say when someone offers them drugs (learn how to say no).
- 4. Talk about how hard it can be to make good choices.
- Talk about how hard it can be to say no to something their friends may want them to try.
- Make it clear that you expect your child not to use drugs.
- 5. Let your child know that you love and support them.
- Let them know that you care about what happens to them and that you do not want the m to put themselves in danger by using drugs.

It takes a very special kind of person to volunteer their time to help others in the community. One local resident, Shirley Goheen, has shown over the years that a community could not be a strong and vibrant without the dedication of those who volunteer.

Shirley Goheen was born in Chapleau but ended up moving along the C.P.R line for 11 years. When she returned in 1967, she began to volunteer almost immediately. Mrs. Goheen started off by volunteering with Boy Scouts, Royal Canadian Air Cadets, and the Fighting 55 for the C.P.R pensioners. It is also very interesting to know that the first C.P.R Christmas parties were actually held in her own home but eventually had to be moved to the legion due to their size.

Today, Mrs. Goheen volunteers for a number of organizations and is highly respected by the community. She is currently the president of the Auxiliary at Chapleau General Hospital. She volunteers for Saint John's Anglican Church, Rebecca Lodge, and even the Cancer Society. In these organizations alone, Mrs. Goheen has been involved with the Terry Fox Run, Cancer

Support Group, Relay for Life, Canada Day activities, fund-raising, the silent auctions for the Auxiliary, and much

The great thing about volunteers is they are very selfless and are always finding ways to help others. Shirley Goheen is a great example of this kind of person. "It is because I respect the community." said Mrs. Goheen. "It definitely takes volunteers to make a better community."

Hopefully after seeing how rewarding it has been for Shirley Goheen as a volunteer, others will be encouraged to volunteer as well and recognize those who dedicate so much to our community.

New Steam Dryers

October 21st, 2004 was a very exciting day for the laundry staff at Chapleau Health Services. Installed and operating are two brand new Unimac 50lb dryers. The dryers were purchased to replace two 28-year-old models, and have given a wonderful new look to the laundry room at the hospital. The new dryers are very efficient as well. Both have a very low noise level and are powered by steam, which makes them cost efficient to operate. A huge thank you to the Chapleau General Hospital Foundation for allocating capital funding. From the laundry staff at Chapleau Health Services

Nouvelles sécheuses à vapeur

Le 21 octobre 2004 a été une journée très excitante pour le personnel de la buanderie des Services de santé de Chapleau en raison de l'installation de deux nouvelles sécheuses UniMac de 50 lb. Ces machines remplacent deux modèles de 28 ans et donnent une belle apparence à la buanderie de l'hôpital. Les nouvelles sécheuses sont très efficaces, peu bruyantes et fonctionnent à la vapeur, ce qui les rend très économiques. On remercie sincèrement la Fondation de l'Hôpital Général de Chapleau d'avoir affecté des fonds à cet achat. Le personnel de la buanderie des Services de santé de
